演題

Phenomenological Responses to the Philosophy of Life

内容

This lecture will deal with general questions of the experience of life and continue with a discussion of the breakdown in the nineteenth century of early modern objective system thinking and its opening up to more subject- and experience-based reflections on life and world and their extensions into the first part of the twentieth century. Key figures to be referred to are Schopenhauer and Dilthey. The third part will comment on the mutual transformation of phenomenology and the philosophy of life with special reference to Husserl and Heidegger.
